Swamp Rabbit Railroad represents the tradition of American folk revival music established by artists like Woody Guthrie, Bob Dylan, and Paul Simon, while also creating innovative and socially-pertinent tunes in the modern folk setting. Like folk songwriters of the past, this husband and wife duo seeks to be a voice for its generation. Their original songs come from an honest place and are performed with real conviction. The Casons' unique blend of harmonies creates a haunting and beautiful sound that captures the essence of the foothills in which they were formed while their onstage chemistry captivates the attention of any audience.

Forming in 2010 in the foothills of the Blue Ridge Mountains as the Swamp Rabbit Trio, Tyler and Lauren Cason found that their chemistry in marriage carried through into their songwriting and musical composition. The couple met while studying music and both have Master's degrees in music. The group emerged in 2015 as Swamp Rabbit Railroad—the name being influenced from the vast history of South Carolina—and have since performed numerous shows across the southeast.

Swamp Rabbit Railroad recently released a spiritual folk album entitled, Down by the Riverside, with Nashville artists/producers David Mullen and Akil Thompson. It is currently available on most major listening platforms. The duo also has full sets of original songs that they are currently recording with Akil Thompson.

"Swamp Rabbit Railroad's music lifts my spirits and speaks to my heart. Their original songs are fresh, creative, and catchy and their covers seem new because of their unique interpretations. I really enjoy their unique style and I often travel to hear them perform live. Every time I hear them, I end up singing their music in my mind for days afterward." – Kay Powers, listener

"When they sing together – that's when the magic happens." – David Mullen

"These guys have songs for days." – Akil Thompson
